

Health Law Weekly* Publishing Guidelines

Description: Health Law Weekly is a 48-issue/year electronic news and analysis digest delivered to members of the American Health Law Association (AHLA) every Friday via email and AHLA's website. The publication offers weekly updates on important legislative, judicial, and regulatory developments affecting health law and includes regular bylined feature articles. Feature articles generally should focus on a current development in health law. Health Law Weekly also publishes best practices, checklists, and other useful practice or client development tools.

Who Produces the Content: Although most of the content is authored by attorney editors in AHLA's Publishing Department, Health Law Weekly feature articles are written by outside author(s). Most outside authors are AHLA members. On occasion, non-AHLA members may contribute a feature article at the discretion of the editorial team.

Length/Content Requirements: Health Law Weekly does not publish content that has been previously published. Because it is an electronic publication, there is substantial flexibility in terms of length and format. Feature articles generally should be at least 1,000 words, including an introduction, conclusion, and appropriate legal citations.

Process for Publication: All feature articles must comply with AHLA's Publication Guidelines for Authors and are subject to editorial review before being accepted for publication. Authors are required to sign AHLA's exclusive copyright license prior to publication.

Contact: Authors should submit feature article proposals to Bianca Bishop (bbishop@americanhealthlaw.org).
